KIRK PAYROLL: IT'S RELATED

SON

Nate Wilson

The elders of Community Evangelical Fellowship (now called Christ Church, Moscow) founded Canon Press in 1988 as a ministry of the church. In 1999 Canon Press' gross annual sales topped $1,000,000. In 2006 the IRS revoked Canon Press' 501(c)(3) tax status when it learned Doug Wilson was skimming royalties off of book sales in violation of the internal revenue code and his public trust. In 2012 Christ Church sold the ministry known as Canon Press to two buyers — Doug Wilson's son, N.D. Wilson, and Doug Wilson's agent, Aaron Rench. At the same time Logos School sold Logos Press to Nate Wilson & Aaron Rench. Neither the Kirk nor Logos School released the terms of these respective deals.

Douglas Wilson founded the Association of Classical & Christian Schools (ACCS) in 1994 as a platform to promote himself as an expert educator. The association is composed K-12 schools and other private institutions such as New Saint Andrews College. These schools use textbooks such as the Omnibus, which contains massive amounts of plagiarized text, and other materials produced by Veritas Press and Logos Press, which is co-owned by N.D. Wilson. The ACCS also hosts an annual conference for its members where Logos Press & Canon Press market their wares. The ACCS 2016 conference featured two of Doug Wilson's children — Nate Wilson & Rebekah Merkle — and his son-in-law Ben Merkle, as conference speakers.
